Anselm of Canterbury

According to Anselm of Canterbury, it was not God's anger that required appeasement, but that His honor needed to be restored.

In his essay "Why did God become Human?", he observed that in order for honor to be restored, restitution must be initiated by those responsible for shaming the dishonored party. This means reparations must be made from the human side, a virtual impossibility due to the depth and reach of sin. Only Christ, divine and human, could accomplish the restoration of God's honor and thus repair the breach between God and humanity.
